

"[Sometimes] there's this fear to do the right thing and stand up for what the constituents really need. Marisa is not going to be afraid; she is going to stand up for what she believes in and what her constituents need." - State Rep. Diana Dizoglio

Dear Friend,

I will always stand up for the right thing. One of the most controversial issues facing our country is immigration and, as an immigration attorney, I happen to know a great deal on that subject.

Immigration is the one issue no one wants to talk about. There's a great deal of fear among elected officials that they can only lose by taking a stance.

With immigration, we need to accomplish two things at once: we want to foster good immigration and immigrant talent while ensuring there are enough jobs for American citizens who are already suffering from unprecedented unemployment.

A key way to accomplish this two-fold objective is to impose large penalties on corporations that exploit immigrants and ensure that they comply with the requirement to offer jobs to qualified U.S. citizens first. To ensure fairness, small businesses and entrepreneurs should have equal access to immigrant talent that will help them grow their businesses and employ more U.S workers.

This plan will return balance to the chaos that is our current immigration system and help domestic American employment rise.

When I am elected, I will pass this exact legislation. If you're in agreement with me on this issue please click here to make a donation today.

The conventional wisdom on immigration reform is that Democrats want voters and Republicans want cheap labor. Actually, both want both. Never underestimate the ability of both parties to put corporate interests above all.

I'm not afraid to take a stand on this issue.

We can do immigration reform right, but only if both sides get their ideas from somewhere outside D.C. and think tanks. Enough with fantasyland, get people from the real world with actual expertise and experience.

I have that experience. 17 years of it in fact. You could say I know this issue better than any candidate in the Northeast. I will get immigration right - once and for all - for our country.

As always, thank you for your time, your friendship and your continuing support.

My very best,
